2 MEN HELPED HIM KILL MOTOR AGENTS

Chicago Slayer Admits Help in Double Murder in New Confession.

ONE HELD, SEEK OTHER
Police Dig Up Yard and
Garage in a Search for More Victims.

Special Despatch to THE NEW YORK HERALD.
CHICAGO, Sept. 12. — Harvey W. Church, confessed slayer of R. J. Daugherty and Carl Ausmus, to-night made a new confession to Chief of Police Charles C. Fitzmorris and Chief Investigator Ben Newmark of the State Attorney's office. He admitted he had two confederates in the killings.

Leon Parks, a garage employee and comrade of Church, was confronted by the youthful slayer. Search for another man is under way. His name and address are known. Meanwhile Church was with Fitzmorris and Newmark and undergoing perhaps the most severe grilling he has yet faced.

One of the objects is to get to the bottom of numerous rumors which have been current that many other serious crimes might be traced to the young slayer. The police are engaged in running down a rumor to-night to the effect that Church is responsible for the death of two men.

Detectives were sent to Church's house on Fulton street, where Daugherty and Ausmus were slain, to dig up the back yard, under the garage, and if necessary, under the basement floor in a search for the bodies.

Does Not Own the House.

Church had told the police he owned the house. He bought it, he said, as he said he bought the Packard automobile from Daugherty and Ausmus, by making payments of cash and Liberty bonds. Discovery was made late in the afternoon that his story was false. Church does not own the house, or at least the County Recorder's office indicates no deed transferring the property to him has been recorded. It stands in the name of Mrs. Elizabeth Robinson. She lived on the West Side. The police were told she had disappeared and that her husband, Henry Robinson, too, had vanished.

Church repeatedly asserted that he purchased the house from Mrs. Robinson November 7, 1920, paying $6,000 in currency. After the alleged sale, Church said, Mrs. Robinson had "moved with her family to Ohio."

The new investigation was begun at the instance of Robert J. Shaw of the Chicago Crime Commission, who said: "Church has confessed to two particularly ghastly murders, the only apparent motive being the desire for possession of a fine automobile. It seems possible that he may also have murdered Mrs. Robinson and her husband to gain possession of the property. The motive would be very similar to that in the murders of the automobile men."

Police then recalled statements of a

GIRL STARVING FOR SAKE OF SISTER SHE SMUGGLED

Stephanie, Already Here, Gives Ellis Island Pass to Carolina, Who Had Been Barred, but Is Seized and Goes on Hunger Strike.

Federal authorities are searching for Carolina Wontropka, pretty Polish girl of 18, who was detained at Ellis Island and a week ago for deportation because the Polish monthly immigration quota was filled. She disappeared from the island last Friday.

Meanwhile her twenty-year-old sister, Stephanie, of Staten Island, who gave Carolina a pass with which she escaped, is in Bellevue Hospital, weak and emaciated from a hunger strike by which she seeks to compel the authorities to release her. She refuses to divulge her sister's whereabouts.

Stephanie, who has been in America for several years, was overjoyed when her younger sister arrived to live with her; then she was disappointed to learn that Carolina could not enter. The elder sister haunted the immigration authorities for several days, but her pleas for her sister were unavailing.

Stephanie's determination on desperate measures. Obtaining a pass she went to Ellis Island. No sooner had she been admitted to the detention pen than she slipped her pass into the hand of her little sister. Stephanie stayed with Carolina for an hour or two and gave her explicit instructions regarding how to get away from Ellis Island and how to proceed, after she had landed in New York, to a point where immigration officials believe a third person was waiting for her.

When Stephanie tried to make her own escape from Ellis Island she was detected and held. Then her sister was released, but did not succeed. Yesterday she was taken before the United States Commissioner, Mr. Hitchcock, on a complaint of having aided in the escape of an alien ordered deported under the immigration law, and was held in $5,000 bail. Then she was sent to Bellevue for recovery and observation.

Chief failed, however, to obtain any substantial change in the statement. "It's silly to say I had any one to help me," Church declared. "I've told you I did it all myself, and if you check up on the way things were left in the house you can see that I'm telling the truth."

Chief Fitzmorris announced that he is searching for two men and three girls with whom he has positive information Church was automobile riding on the night of the murder.

Chief Fitzmorris, Coroner Hoffman and officials of the State's Attorney's office declared their belief that Church is shielding some one accomplice or accomplices. Norton opposes them in the belief that Church killed both men and disposed of their bodies unaided.

Acting on instructions from State's Attorney Crowe, the case was rushed to the Grand Jury by Assistant State's Attorneys Wharton and Jonas. True bills are expected Tuesday. They were to have been voted immediately but, because of the absence of Coroner's physicians, whose testimony was deemed necessary, the hearing was postponed.

The theory that Church's aged mother had helped the boy in disposing of the bodies was advanced by State's Attorney Crowe. "It is not believed," declared Crowe, "that Mrs. Church had anything to do with the actual murders, but that she may have aided her son after learning of the crime."

The father of young Church was informed of his son's confession early this morning. He wept, but recovered sufficiently to go to breakfast with Mrs. Church, a police matron and the detective sergeants who have been keeping them under surveillance. Mrs. Church was not told of the statement that had cleared the mystery of the double murder.

As the case stands now Church, youthful and slight of build, is the confessed murderer of the larger men in one of the most savage crimes in Chicago police chronicles, and for no other reason the investigators can evolve than that he wanted to show off as the owner of an expensive automobile.

He strangled the two salesmen with rope nooses, clubbed them with a baseball bat, hid their bodies, one in a shallow grave scooped in his garage, and the other in the Desplaines River, and then set out for the village of his birth in the new automobile. All this according to his confession.

All that the investigators could see behind the atrocious murders was the vanity of a country boy who came to the city longing to return to the village in his own automobile.

WHISKEY $40 QUART ON CENTURY ROOF

DRUG STORES ARE RAIDED
Owners and Clerks Accused of Selling Liquor Without Prescriptions.

It developed yesterday that liquor comes high when bought in the restaurant on the roof of the Century Theatre Building, when Sigmund Werner, owner of the eating establishment, and Joe Buck, a waiter employed in the place, were held in $500 and $1,000 respectively by United States Commissioner Hitchcock on a charge of violating the Volstead act.

Federal prohibition agents do not usually wear evening clothes when they make arrests and seize liquor, but when late Saturday night Herman Wittenberg, a prohibition sleuth, who had been schooled for months by Izzy Einstein in the art of disguise, entered the restaurant he had not overlooked a thing necessary for the man about town. There even was a young woman leaning on his arm.

Joe Buck was right on the job and, according to Wittenberg's testimony, agreed to serve a half pint of whiskey with their meal for $16. The dry agent told Buck he had just got in from Havana and could stand the raise in price compared to the Cuban resort.

The liquor was purchased for $10 after Buck had a heart to heart talk with Werner, according to Wittenberg. In court yesterday Werner pleaded not guilty, as did Buck.

Others arraigned by Wittenberg and held in $500 bail each were Martin Fitzgerald, a druggist of 439 Seventh avenue, and Harold Harwood, his clerk; Robert Falkner, druggist of 868 Eighth avenue, and his clerk, Charles Walker, all charged with either selling or possessing liquor in violation of the law.

The drug stores were raided Saturday by Wittenberg, who testified the clerks sold him liquor without a prescription. Commissioner Hitchcock was told that more than $50,000 worth of whiskey was seized in the cellar of Fitzpatrick's drug store, for which the accused had no permit.
